BEDROOM DOORS VS FIRE

A closed door between you and a raging fire could provide enough protection to save your life. It takes fire 10 to 15 minutes to burn through a wooden door. Many of the 10,000 people who die each year in home fires are not actually burned to death, but are overcome by superheated air, smoke and toxic gases. So don't automatically fling open your bedroom door. This may be a fatal impulse.

If you are awakened by fire and the bedroom door is closed, test it before opening. If the panels are hot or smoke is leaking in around the edges - keep it closed and use the window exit. If the door is open and more than a little smoke is present in the room, close it immediately. Get down low - there's usualy a layer of relatively smoke-free air about 18 inches off the floor.

Always sleep with the bedroom or hall door closed. It can keep fire out long enough to allow escape or rescue through the window.

Health-wise

By Helen F. Andrew, M.S., Health Educator

Lifetime Habits

Hulda Crooks, the 80-year-old California woman who climbed Mt. Whitney for the 15th time last August, is living proof that old age is not synonymous with sickness and disability.

The Loma Linda University research assistant is an enthusiastic advocate of healthful living. She jogs a mile every morning and walks another mile at a brisk pace.

Mrs. Crooks considers her annual mountain climb a demonstration of the benefits of her healthful lifestyle, including vegetarianism, which are available not just to a few exceptional people but to everyone.

Zest for living, a trim figure, resistance to disease—these things don't just happen to some lucky people while others were born to be tired, overweight or sick. They are the by-products of learning and following good health habits.

It is true that some people are endowed with more vital energy and are able to abuse their bodies with less immediate results than others; some gain weight more easily than others. But there are laws that govern the way our bodies function which are as inescapable as the law of gravity. To ignore them means sooner or later that we pay the price in lack of energy, disease and shortened life.

The first step toward buoyant health is to discard the illusion that keeping people well is a job for the experts. Hospitals are full of people who have ignored the simple rules of health until distressing symptoms bring them to a doctor. And it is one of the frustrations of the medical profession that patients come with unreal expectations of some kind of magic potion which will cancel out all the abuse to which they have subjected their bodies.

With all the marvels of modern medical science, there is no way to repeal the law which decrees that the wages of smoking, drinking alcohol, poor eating habits, lack of exercise, overwork or insufficient sleep are paid in heart disease, strokes, lung cancer, emphysema, arthritis, diabetes and all the other degenerative diseases that are cutting millions of lives unnecessarily short.

The second step is to become well-informed about the body's needs for exercise, a well-balanced diet, pure water, fresh air, rest.

Two small paperbacks written in simple laymen's terms are a good place to start: It's Your World of Good Health Lessons ($1 each, available from Voice of Prophecy, Box 55, Glendale, Ca. 91209).

Lifetime habits can't be changed instantly but every change will bring its reward in increased well-being and will make the next step easier.
